My 'Memory Hoarding' is driving me crazy. But I think you have described enough details to warrant an evaluation. I am casting my vote with a neurologist or neuropsychological testing. The difference is that a neurologist is a physician who will understand your symptoms as the result of brain functioning.

Driving Evaluations by an Occupational Therapist. The behind-the-wheel or on-road part of the evaluation takes place in a vehicle equipped with safety equipment such as an instructor's brake. The on-road evaluation identifies an older driver's strengths and weaknesses and ways to keep driving safely. If necessary, the evaluation may use adaptive equipment. See Interventions.

That's when I realized I could continue to progress in therapy for as long as I wanted. All I needed to do was work with a therapist who, like me, believed therapy was a lifelong journey. Fortunately

Peter was the right fit for me, so my journey continued. If you are in therapy for a long time, something like this might happen to you.
