In the column, "Re-Think What You Thought," I mentioned less than half of predictions are accurate. This phenomenon has been well documented, yet market predictions continue to abound. I began making market predictions in my newsletter in January of 2016, mostly to poke fun at the whole prediction process, but also to test myself against the experts.

Earlier this week, we looked at one of the many ways I make money on the side—selling snake oil to enfeebled minds. Today I'm going to reveal another secret money-making scheme of mine that has brought in tens of thousands of dollars in extra income for our family: selling my wife's body on the street.. Now I know what you're thinking—"Why didn't I think of that?"—but hear me out.

The modern Japanese writing system uses a combination of logographic kanji, which are adopted Chinese characters, and syllabic kana. Kana itself consists of a pair of syllabaries: hiragana, used primarily for native or naturalised Japanese words and grammatical elements, and katakana, used primarily for foreign words and names, loanwords, onomatopoeia, scientific names, and sometimes for emphasis.
